AngstroLooper is a tape-style processing plugin for your audio, originally designed to be used with live and acoustic music. AngstroLooper brings the classic sound of tape delay to your DAW. The AngstroLooper plugin operates by altering the sample based on the settings of the six sliders – this sounds more like an old school tape delay than any other plugin out there. The angstrolooper is designed to be a stereo flanger but it can also be used in mono mode, this is good for smaller devices that might be going to a small audience. AngstroLooper is designed to be a subtle effect which allows your sound to evolve into something that you have not intended when playing live. By changing the settings you can evoke a warm, rubbery tonal character into your music, making you sound like a genius. The six sliders control a six stages of an echo effect, applied in either stereo or mono mode. The first stage is your path, the second the rate, the third the mix, the fourth is the amount of saturation or delay, the fifth the panning or width (0-100%) and finally the sixth is the Total Delay which is either a horizontal track fader or a cross fade. The odd name comes from the phrase 'Got a spastic stroke of genius?' referring to the affect which the plugin is capable of. I'm hoping that the original meaning of the word 'stroke' is coming back into use. As a side-note, original tatty Master tapes were really cheap - we used to call them 'Masters' Features: - You can run AngstroLooper in either stereo or mono mode, limited to the edit function. - Six sliders to control your path, rate, mix, amount of saturation, delay, panning and total delay. - A max delay of 25 seconds and a min delay of one second. - You can save the settings, so that if you want to have a go at experimental sound design, you can always have a go again. - A screen with a cheatsheet which allows you to find what settings do what easily. - Includes a 'Toggle Lyrics' button, which is on by default but can be switched off. - In mono mode, this is a mono flanger. - In stereo, this is a 'Tilt' effect. When this is high, the bottom channel is more effected and when this is low, the

In MIDI File:  4th note holds and plays until the loop length is reached  8th note holds until the loop length is reached  Hold = repeat always after the hold state  Play = after the length is reached, it plays continuously  Repeat = loops count times (if the loop length is reached, then after the loop length is reached, it will repeat the loops count times)  7th note = a harmonic that completes the chord from the start note, eg you can make your chord with just a Dd9 chord with the root Dd9 chord and then make it Dd11 - the hold (D) will be in the loop, the loop length is met, then the play D in the loop, again loop length is met. As long as the chord can be finished, then you can play the rest of the chord. Hold will allow you to keep the hold to the loop length and you will be able to play the chord whilst the loop length is met, then it will loop again, then again and again  Hold + play = the hold will be met before the loop reaches its end, play will be continuous after the loop length is reached, if the loop length is met, then the hold is up and you'll be able to play the chord afterwards For stereo:  All controls can have their volume set in the timeline, these will affect the stereo mix from the stereo effects, eg TouchStereo and Main Mono mode will change the touch control, to be a standard flanger or tape style flanger and Main Mono mode will allow the touch control to be silent  Hold and repeat are all mixed in the mono section  Touch = touch is set to the stereo section volume, so it will be mixed with the touch + repeat (Main Mono) or touch + the repeat (Stereo) Byzantine ===== Description: Along the same lines as AngstroLooper Activation Code, but the plugin can be used without restrictions and so anyone can use it as they see fit. Not at all limited to a one chord per bar thing either – it supports almost any chord progressions. It also doesn't have any of the nerdy MIDI things like multiple notes at once, but it does have a 'hold' state (after the chord has been played, it will hold until it reaches the loop length). I would post more information here but I'm 09e8f5149f

What's New In AngstroLooper?

- Keyboard Loops: The Keyboard is split into Touch and Hold controls. Touch controls the incoming noise and holds the outgoing 'track' note, if you lay both controls down at once you get a hold off sound, its useful for holding down a noise slowly to give a flanger. Hold control is fixed at the zero position, it does not modulate with any other control. The only use for the Hold control is to create patches from a continuous, held sound. The other controls are all for 'tape mode' controls such as reverse, forward and rewind. - True Stereo Main Mono, Stereo and True Stereo are all present and correct, depending on the mode, the channels will be switched either left right or left right left right and so on. For example, on Hold mode, Touch Mono will feed back from the main channel to the touch input, and Touch Stereo will feed back from Touch Mono to the touch channel. - All Cycling The controls all cycle, except the Hold control. While the controls cycle they process loops at different rates depending on the loop they are processing. For example the first Touch loop will be processed at the same time as Touch Mono, the second loop will be process at the same time as Touch Stereo etc, as the control progresses up the stack the loop rate decreases. - Touch Loops Touch loops are handled by a 'Touch Loop Input' plugin which has a touch input, a touch clock and also a touch delay. The Touch Loop input has two modes, Hold mode or Bang on Mode. The Touch Loop input also has a Looper that adds some of the delay of an old tape machine. - Looper The Looper is a muting control, it is a controlled attenuator that 'mutes' the incoming noise and 'attenuates' the outgoing noise. The Looper can be paused and un-paused by using the Touch control, it is also possible to turn it on and off by simply touching the touch control. - Touch Stereo and Touch Mono The Touch channels can be mapped to different outputs on the soundcard or to a speaker. Each touch channel has a volume control and a touch delay. The volume controls are each given a colour, increasing the volume causes a colour to be applied, the volume at which the colour is applied determines the volume level. Different colours correspond to different levels of volume. The volume is controlled by simply touching the touch controls. The Touch Stereo has
