Q: The advantage of SVG over PNG for uploaded images? Why would you use SVG over PNG for logos, etc. that are uploaded to the site? Is it simply that it's difficult to edit via a standard web browser or, is it preferable to save file size, etc.?

A: SVG is a vector graphics format and PNG is a raster graphics format. The vector format allows multiple ways of representing the same data - scalar and vector, closed and open. The use of scalable vector graphics (SVG) provides benefits over the more traditional raster graphics formats. Examples of benefits include allowing editing and editing of content in ways that are only possible with the aid of a vector graphics editor. SVG files are smaller than PNG files. SVG files do not require an intermediate step to convert to PNG format (and the converse is not true). Thus, they can be compressed very effectively; thus, files in SVG format can be smaller than files in PNG format.

A: SVG takes a lot less file size than PNG. I use Photoshop to compile my SVGs into a PNG, but if you are doing this I would recommend Save for Web and Devices, as the quality is great there.

A: SVG is a vector image format so any edits you make to the file in an image editor such as Photoshop are reflected in the final result. Additionally it is possible to draw hyperlinks inside the image. PNG is a standard image format which you can edit with any image editor. It is not possible to add hyperlinks to a PNG image, and any edits will not be reflected in the final result.

Now we all get to celebrate International Bubble Tea Day, the day when we all get to stuff our face with bubble tea and contemplate our life choices. It's for these reasons, in the heat of the summer, that we find ourselves contemplating a beverage which, in addition to offering us hydration and something to quench our thirst, remains an excellent means of cooling down. And that's why (as an obvious reference to Coca-Cola) we see the latter as the perfect beverage for International Bubble Tea Day. The Bubble Tea Kingdom I'm sure you've heard about bubble tea and know how much it's a growing trend in those parts of the world that have huge populations of Asians. Bubble tea is a drink made with various ingredients, but traditionally it tends to use one of two ingredients. The first is a milky liquid called tapioca, and the other is a thick, sweet, slightly acidic drink called tapioca pearls. For the purpose of this article, you should be aware that bubble tea is actually called "boba tea" in these parts of the world and that this is the first time anyone mentions in any fashion the phrase "bubble tea" over here in the European part of the planet. It's also in many places that, although bubble tea is served without tapioca pearls, the soda water or the lime soda used to make it is often actually made with tapioca pearls.
