The news and stories that matter, delivered weekday mornings. Amanda Todd was sentenced Wednesday to three years in a U.S. prison for posting video of her own sexual abuse to the Internet. The sentence gives the Canadian teen a chance to walk free and possibly begin a new life after her admitted cyberbullying spree that landed her a juvenile detention facility and trips to a hospital where she was examined for mental health issues. Let our news meet your inbox. The news and stories that matters, delivered weekday mornings. This site is protected by recaptcha "I'd like her to have a second chance," Todd's mother, Candace Phillips, said after the sentence was announced. "I want her to have a normal life, a normal future." A Canadian judge on Wednesday sentenced a 19-year-old girl to three years in a U.S. prison for posting a sexually explicit video of herself online. EPA / Amandatodd Todd admitted guilt in June to taunting someone she met online in 2010 and eventually posting the video. She was 14 at the time. The person, now an adult, spoke in court and said he was "stunned" by the sentence, as well as by the fact that Todd showed no remorse for her actions. He said Todd's case was "just the tip of the iceberg" in the adult world of cyberbullying. In court, Judge Randal Hall said Todd's crime was "shocking" and "offensive," but said her punishment was not meant to "taste the bitter of shame." "The odds were against her even being here today," Hall said. "You got lucky." When the judge discussed Todd's sentence with her parents, the Phillips started to cry. Amanda Todd received a three-year prison sentence Wednesday at a Colorado juvenile court. NBC News "I'm so happy that she was sentenced," Phillips said. "It was absolutely shocking, and she has no idea how it affects me." In May, Todd pleaded guilty in Arapahoe County, Colorado, to felony charges of unlawful sexual contact, distributing a sexually explicit image, exploitation of a child, tampering with a witness, invasion of privacy and unlawful use of computer services
