1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a novel process for producing alkylbenzene derivatives and alkylbenzene derivatives produced by the same. 2. Description of the Prior Art There are a variety of known processes for producing alkylbenzene derivatives such as methylbenzene derivatives. For example, processes are known, as described in Japanese Patent Publication (Unexamined) No. 61-171963, wherein an aldehyde and a hydrazine are subjected to a hydrazinolysis reaction in water containing an inorganic acid and a metal sulfate to produce an alkylbenzene derivative. The reaction proceeds most effectively in an aqueous solution. However, the hydrazine used is in the form of an aqueous solution, and therefore, the reaction is accompanied by the evolution of a large amount of H₂O. Accordingly, it is necessary to conduct the reaction in the presence of a dehydrating agent such as an acid or a base or of a hydrazine derivative. Consequently, the reaction system is complicated and the reaction is conducted in a batchwise fashion. Also, processes are known, as described in Japanese Patent Publication (Unexamined) No. 61-171963, wherein an aldehyde, a hydroxylamine, a hydrazine and water containing a metal sulfate are subjected to a reductive hydrazinolysis reaction in an aqueous solution containing at least one solvent to produce an alkylbenzene derivative. In the prior art processes, the aldehyde used as a starting material is not only expensive but also the removal of the aldehyde in a reaction mixture is difficult. Thus, an expensive separation/purification system is required. On the other hand, in the known processes, since an acid is used for the reaction as an acid catalyst, metal impurities are necessarily contained in the product. This necessitates a complicated purification process. Further, there are known processes for producing alkylbenzene derivatives, as described in Japanese Patent Publication (Unexamined) Nos. 62-275561 and 62-275562, wherein a benzene monomer is hydrolyzed in the presence of an acid catalyst. However, in these known processes, the benzene monomer is hydrolyzed and then the resulting product is treated with an acid catalyst, which is quite different in Generalized and aneurysmal bone cyst of the skull. Four patients with generalized and/or aneurysmal bone cyst involving the skull are described. All were thought to have a primary bone tumor based on radiographic findings of expansile lesions involving the skull and in one case frontal sinus involvement. A pathologic diagnosis of generalized or aneurysmal bone cyst was obtained only after the lesions were treated with surgery and radiotherapy. In all cases, there was a significant decrease in the size of the lesions, the majority of which were completely replaced by fat.
